

The Future of Children* begins a blog.

The mission of The Future of Children is to translate the best social science research into information that is useful to policymakers, practitioners, grant-makers, advocates, the media, and students of public policy.

As many of you know, we produce two volumes and policy briefs a year, each accompanied by shorter summary products.

Each volume focuses on a particular area of child policy. The articles pull together the best research on a topic, translate the findings for a broader audience, and speculate about the policy implications of such research. In order to reach a wide audience, we offer all electronic versions of our materials free of charge.

In our efforts to broaden our audience, we are introducing a Future of Children Blog. In these posts, we will highlight findings from our various volumes – making an effort to tie the research and policy recommendations presented to current affairs.

So please bookmark this page, and contribute your thoughts. We look forward to an interesting dialogue about the future of children and the various ways we can make that future promising and worthwhile.

Elisabeth Donahue, Executive Director

The Future of Children: A Publication of The Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs at Princeton University and The Brookings Institution.